

How Electricity is Produced from Combustion Gases

A gas turbine burns either natural gas or low-sulfur oil. Air is compressed and discharged into combustion chambers. Fuel is added, mixed with air and burned. High-pressure combustion gases are formed and flow to the turbine. Pressure rotates the turbine which turns an electric generator.

